Excerpt: . the right corrective, by recommending the Gospel ornament of a meek and humble spirit. Delighting, as children do, in active employments, they would be highly pleased to carry wooden bricks; and at given signals to place them in a certain order. They might also be employed in winding string or measuring distances; in fact, whatever exercises tend to prepare them for manual labour, and promote habits of industry, order, and activity, are most desirable. The following letter addressed to the editor of the Christian Monitor might suggest some hints, much in accordance with what has been advanced: --Sir, --Finding a few laths in my cellar the other day, it occurred to me that I might make some use of them in my school. I immediately set to work and divided them into convenient lengths, some four, five, and others about six inches. I then...
